tired of the whole "Autobot Deception" thing, so they decided to try for the Justice League. After Optimus Prime and Megatron forged the Cybertron Alliance, Twincast returned to his original form as Blaster by means unknown. Note: the artwork by Hidetsugu Yoshioka for the single story page in which Blaster appeared features all the characters in their Action Master bodies, implying Blaster may have become an Action Master in this continuity as well. Dreamwave Generation One comics continuity Blaster and his partner Perceptor were co-leaders of an Autobot faction millions of years ago on Cybertron. While this faction may or may not have existed in the Dark Ages before Ultra Magnus unified the Autobots under his command, they were the only known resistance to Megatron's tyrannical rule during the Age of Internment that followed. In modern times, Blaster allied himself with Hot Rod and Kup's underground resistance, opposing the new tyrannical rule of Shockwave. Blaster seems to have a "thing" against tyrannical rules. At one point, he remarked that he couldn't wait to go to Earth. Unfortunately, Dreamwave's bankruptcy meant he never got to go. Poor Blaster. Dreamwave Transformers/G.I. Joe comics continuity In the year 1985, Blaster and Perceptor hastily took off for Earth in an starship poorly-suited for interstellar travel. Upon arrival, they unsurprisingly crashed, landing in the forests of Oregon near Mount St. Hilary. They were discovered there by a G.I. Joe team led by Flint. Targets of Opportunity Note: Due to Dreamwave's bankruptcy, Blaster and Perceptor's motivations for coming to Earth — and pretty much anything else — were never revealed. Binaltech Asterisk I want to tell you about the Transformers! This character article is a stub and is missing information on their fictional appearances. You can help Teletraan I: The Transformers Wiki by expanding it. IDW comics continuity This section covers fiction that is ongoing. It will be added to as the story progresses. If it isn't current, you can help by updating it. I'm Batman. Blaster was known as The Voice, a patriotic broadcaster who used his gift with words to rally Autobots whose faith was lacking, or who were in a bad way. He was such a positive influence on the Autobots, it was arranged that he be assassinated. The attempt failed, but Blaster's damaged body was ejected into space. Picked up by a passing trawler, he was delivered home, where it was revealed that he had to have been attacked by an Autobot. In an effort to flush the traitor out, Blaster went back on the air. The attempt worked, and his would-be killer was revealed: Beachcomber. Soundwave had used Bombshell to implant a cerebro-shell and ordered him to kill Blaster. However, he was able to resist when Blaster used his greatest weapon: his voice. As a damaged Beachcomber was brought in for repairs, Blaster swore he'd find Soundwave and that the last thing he'd ever hear would be... the Voice. Spotlight: Blaster Toys Generation One "Still think you're so superior, Soundwave?" Blaster (Autobot, 1985/1986/2006) Japanese ID number: 38, TFC-21 Accessories: Electro-Scrambler Gun Originally a Microchange "Radi-Casse Robo" ("radio-cassette", you see), Blaster transforms into a miniature "ghetto blaster" boombox with a fold-out carrying handle. Pressing the "eject" button pops open his tape door, which can store a single micro-cassette Transformer. Due to a possible common internal misassembly issue, many original Blasters had doors which would not open when the eject button is pressed, nor would the other buttons work. In robot mode Blaster is freaking huge by the standards of Generation One Transformers, towering over most Autobots and Decepticons. He has rather limited (useful) articulation, located in his neck and shoulders. Blaster is not a functional AM radio like his original Microchange toy, but has some left over parts from it, such as the molded power switch above the left speaker, the earphone jack behind the right speaker and the tuning dial next to the tape door. Some releases of Blaster still retain the battery-cover back from the Microchange release (see Trivia). Blaster was re-released in 2006 as part of the "Transformers Collection" "bookbox" series, packaged with Steeljaw. Twincast Twincast (Autobot, 1987/2006) Japanese ID number: C-116 Accessories: Electro-Scrambler Gun The first Blaster toy was redecoed and had its tape-door retooled in order to accommodate two cassettes at once. The clear-plastic part of the door was also changed to clear-red, so when certain cassettes were placed inside, the "secret plans" decals on them would reveal the "weak point" of either Fortress Maximus or Scorponok, much like using the tech-specs decoders. He came with Steeljaw, who was given one of these new decals. In 2006, Twincast was reissued as an e-Hobby exclusive, this time packaged with the new character Flip Sides. ActionMaster Which gun is better? Blaster w/ Flight Pack (Action Master, 1990) Accessories: "Flight Pack" backpack, "tractor beam electron gun" A non-transforming action figure, Action Master Blaster (not to be confused with the "Action Master Blasters" price-point) is compatible with any other Action Master vehicle or accessory. His design is based largely on his cartoon model, with elements from the toy added (like his visor). He came with the "Flight Pack" accessory, which converts from a winged jetpack to a massive "electro-scrambler" cannon. Communications Liaison (Just-4-toys WST, 2009) Accessories: Electro Scrambler Gun, Steeljaw A Just-4-Toys exclusive, Communications Liaison (trademark issues) was released at the same time as Military Operations Commander. His transformation is similar to the G1 toy, but the fists fold back 90 degrees for tape deck mode, his Electro Scrambler Gun fits over his wrist, and he includes a WST Steeljaw, but no weapons. He shares some aspects with WST Soundwave, such as weaponless tapes. Binaltech Asterisk Broadblast meets Lumina (Binaltech, 2005) Japanese ID number: BTA03 Accessories: Engine/gun, Lumina Hoshi with stand, driving arms and driving legs A redeco of Alternators Skids, "Broadblast" transforms into a 1:24 scale Toyota bB, aka the Scion xB. He has working doors, hood, and trunk, plus his engine becomes a non-firing weapon. He also comes with an extra decal sheet, which includes signs for "TBN" which possibly stands for "Transformers Broadcast Network" or some such; there is Japanese text on the labels as well, but it's really tiny and hard to make out. He came with a PVC-plastic figurine of the human newsgirl Lumina Hoshi. Attacktix Blaster was likely to have been one of several Transformers Attacktix Booster pieces, using a powerful spring-loaded "blaster" missile launcher attack. Though displayed as part of the Attacktix display at the Star Wars "Celebration IV" convention, he —and all the other pieces revealed at the show— were ultimately never released. Proceed on your way to oblivion.This item has been canceled, with no current plans for release. Universe (2008) Preparations for the military strike, dubbed Operation Supergroovalisticprosfunktication Storm, are already underway. Autobot Blaster with Blockrock Mini-Con! (Voyager, 2008) Accessories: Tri-barrel "particle feedback blaster"/bomb, double-barrel "harmonic wave cannon"/bomb, Cybertron Autobot Cyber Key Blaster is a redeco of Cybertron Soundwave, transforming into a Cybertronic stealth bomber vaguely like an F-117A Nighthawk prototype, the Have Blue. He comes with three hexagonal prism "bombs"; one converts into his partner Blockrock, the other two unfold into non-firing blaster weapons. Any one of these "bombs" can be stored in his robot-mode chest, which opens by plugging a Cyber Planet Key into him (his is a gunmetal-bordered clear-plastic Cybertron-style Autobot Key). The other two bombs store in indents on the underside of his wings. If only... His packaging art shows him with only half of his chest-door as clear-blue, emulating the original toy design's tape-window, but the final product (and stock photography) show the blue all the way across. However, his visor does have red paint to simulate the "goggle visor" look of the original toy and Marvel comics model. This mold was also used to make Galaxy Force Soundblaster. Merchandise Robot Heroes Blaster vs. Thrust (2008) Notes Whoever Directed this commercial must've thought Soundwave and Blaster are gay. The pre-Transformers version of Blaster was actually a functioning AM radio. The Microchange release of the toy came with a microcassette-sized radio that plugged in to Radi-Casse Robo, which had internal wiring that allowed the radio to play through the speakers in its legs. The big hole in his Electro-Scrambler rifle is an earphone storage space, while the cord can be wrapped around the gun and the plug connects to the hole in the gun's stock. Despite popular belief, the compartment in the back of some Blaster toys was not a remnant of a battery compartment, but was actually storage for one of the transforming microcassettes, since a plug kept them from fitting in the cassette door. The battery compartment was actually in one of his legs. According to Grimlock on a Letters Page, Blaster's visor is retractable. He uses it to shield his especially delicate optical sensors from sunlight. In October, 1991, Blaster states that he is 3,701,921 years old on the letter page of Marvel UK issue #326. The packaging for Twincast's e-Hobby reissue was the same generic Decepticon-scheme box used to package Magnus. However, since Flip Sides is technically a Decepticon, it... sorta works. According to Blaster himself on the UK letters page, he has two siblings: Toaster and Karmen. And then there's Blaster, his retroactively-created and less-seen brother. Blaster hosted the Marvel UK comic's letters page for the final 33 issues (from issue #300 to issue #332), to tie in with his Action Master toy. Here, the letters page was dubbed "Darn 'n' Blast," replacing Dreadwind's "Dread Tidings" (despite Dreadwind's holing himself up in the Marvel offices. He was finally evicted by Blaster who complained that Dreadwind had decorated the office in all purple and orange with a solitary picture of a dog with sad eyes). His characterization in the letters page is more in line with his fun-loving, hip and happening self from the cartoon than the rather grim, brooding, rebellious loner seen in the comics. He arrived on the letters page in advance of his resurrection in the comics itself, which did not occur until issue #321. He was explicitly identified as being a non-transformer Action Master, though his partner Flight Pack did not appear. A character in the Disney movie "G-Force" resembles Blaster. He has his accent, same military position, and even shares his name![[June 8, 2009] One of the main reasons that Blaster survived the movie was that he had some new toys [Eject, Ramhorn, Steeljaw and Rewind] to show off. Games G1: Awakening mobile game The Blaster was among of the Autobots, who was to Ark in search of new energy sources. After 4 million years it has been renovated by the Metroplex. When the Autobots seized the space bridge and entered on Cybertron, signalman with Optimus Prime and Bumblebee was turned power off the fortress of Shockwave.
